Non-Scheduled Airlines Get 'Death-Order' Stay

By the United Press

The civil aeronautics board was put under court order yesterday not to put into effect its so-called "death edict" regulation against non-scheduled airlines.

Federal judge Walter M. Bastian issued a permanent injunction against the regulation, but CAB said it will appeal promptly to the United States Court of Appeals.

The regulation, scheduled to go into effect June 5, would limit non-scheduled carriers to not more than three flights a month between some cities, and not more than eight between others.
